What makes a play a classic?
It’s an eternal question whose only answer is: time. What makes a play a classic is its ability to inspire future generations of writers, and to endure in relevance for future generations of audiences. Shakespeare, Ibsen, Lope de Vega, Chekhov, Molière... theater would not be what it is today without these timeless playwrights. And today’s playwrights continue to find inspiration in their plays.

DPS Classics is a new imprint that presents classic world dramas translated and adapted by the brightest writers for the theater today. Our Classics Acting Editions are set in a lovely new format for ease of use in production as well as for pleasure of reading—and they look pretty attractive on a shelf.

Peruse the current selection of DPS Classics and find an old favorite by a new writer, or pick up a play you’ve never heard of by the forebears of your favorite contemporary DPS plays. This brand-new imprint is growing fast, so sign up for our Now Published eblast to be alerted of DPS Classics as we release them.
